Edward McGuire was taken before Commissioners Shields yesterday to answer to a charge of passing counterfeit coin. He was arrested in the Jefferson Market Police Court, where he was awaiting the trial of a friend. The coin which he passed appeared to be a token issued in the first year of Queen Victoria's reign, and is said to resemble somewhat an English half-sovereign. The reverse bears the impression of a horse and rider, with the date 1837 and the words "The Queen." McGuire, when he was offered the coin, said he supposed it was worth $2.50. The prisoner was held in $1,000 bail.

The telegraphers met yesterday afternoon at Clarendon Hall and buried the late strike with sentimental ceremonies. Master-Workman Mitchell called the meeting to order, and after giving a brief outline of the strike from its inception to its close spoke of the need which had compelled its abandonment. He commended the strikers on the brave an apparent victory for the western Union it was like the battle of Bunker Hill—victory that was likely to cost the victor dearly.

John D. Mitchell said: "The failure of the strike may be attributed to three causes—lack of funds, an underestimate of the strength of our opponents, and the ease with which the public may itself to a change in the condition of affairs no matter how uncomfortable it may be. The lesson learned in this strike will make us irresistible in the future."

John Mitchell said: "We went home last night and had a good night's rest. We came to Clarendon Hall this morning, and after calmly and dispassionately considering the the strike at an end. We are not satisfied with the course of the Knights of Labor, and one of the results of the strike may be a severance of connection between the Brotherhood of Telegraphers and that organization. That is my opinion at all events.

A BRIGHT FORECAST.
From The Morning Journal.
Mr. Whitelaw Reid rendered a valuable public service yesterday in presenting to the TRIBE the opinions of a large number of representative men on the present business situation. They all agree that the outlook for the fall is exceedingly bright. Purchases are being made in all lines of goods. Anything like a panic is out of the question. Even the gentlemen prominent in Wall Street who have been interviewed on the subject declare that the recent flurry in stocks had no influence whatever on the general course of trade, and that goods trade happily prove to be without the slightest foundation in fact. The Boston failures in the leather business were the result solely of over-speculation. All the great banks are sound, the crops are excellent, and the foreign demand for our products is likely to be heavy. THE TRIBUNE'S review of the situation cannot fail

George Brown's closing address for the prosecution in the lard case will be printed by Monday and distributed. This is to offset the publication of the Fowlers' address, five hundred copies of which were distributed. Lard was five cents higher today out of sympathy with the lard case, but it is not expected that the lard speculation in general will lead to a rise in prices. There were only 60,000 hogs received last week, 20,000 of which were shipped and yet the price tumbled 75 cents per hundred. Corn was 4 cent lower today, and the price of wheat was 1 cent lower. The shipments were larger than the receipts, although the men, however, who are betting on an advance in prices, are quite sure that the lard case will probably be reached on Tuesday. Whatever it is, an advance is expected. The following is the result of the suit: It is believed that they will bring libel suits against all who have been connected with the case. The Fowlers' suit against McGee's was for $400,000. There were 40,000 barrels of lard in the case. The Fowlers' suit was found to be adulterated, the delivery will be delivered regular, as has lard, and the Fowlers say they have spent $100,000. The Fowlers say they have spent $100,000 in their defence. It is said that there is a possibility of a settlement. The lard case is a price controlled by Armour. It is a matter, however, simply between buyers and Armour. There are no

The color decorators are already at work on the proscenium arch, and on the portion of their work already completed the effect of the whole may be predicted. The key-note of the color scheme is yellow running from a pale, delicate primrose to a rich, roddy old gold, and deepening in great measure on the varied tones which are given by the lavish use of gliding. The hangings will preserve the same scheme and promise to light up well and give a harmonious effect to a feature which too often is a distressing discord in the general color effect.

"Are you satisfied with the stage of progress?"

"Thoroughly so. I have no doubt that by October the building will be ready for occupancy. By the way, there is another point I should like to call your attention to, and that is the completely fireproof character of the whole building. Even the auditorium floor is hard concrete on which the floor boards are laid, so that were they to catch fire they would simply smoulder and never reach a blaze. All the stairs are of iron, so that the corridors and all finishes sit on a concrete base, on an encaustic pavement. An audience can enter, so that building and sit out the performance with an absolute certainty that it is fireproof."
